

Handwritten Journal

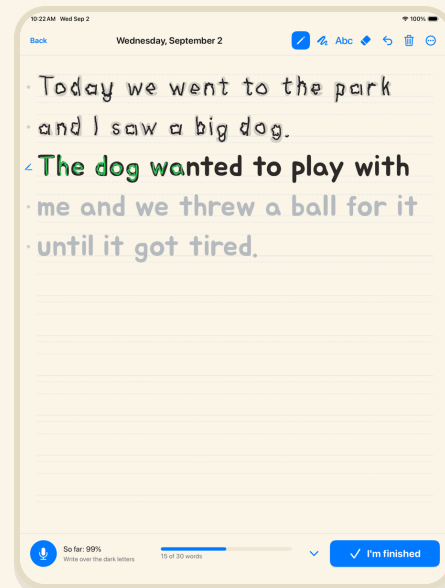

Press fact sheet. An iPad journal where a child's own words become the handwriting they practise.

For press and reviewers

The only handwriting app that keeps the page instead of the score.

Every letter-tracing app hands a child a word list. Handwritten Journal hands them their own sentence: the child says what happened today, it appears on a ruled page, and they write over it. The guide disappears under their ink, line by line, and the page joins a journal in their own handwriting. A year of days becomes a book.

- Grades as they write. Per-letter accuracy in green and red ink, stroke order judged, and a letter drawn backwards taught on the spot — during real writing, not in a drill.
- Keeps the journal on the iPad. No account, no advertising. Speech is recognised on the iPad and no audio is stored. Anonymous crash reports and usage statistics are the only data it sends, and they are never sold.
- A keepsake first. Every page is dated and kept; the whole journal exports as a PDF book.
- Independent. Built by one developer, Matt Vorst. The basic app is always free; additional features may be paid, because the data is never sold.

Finished lines are the child's handwriting; the current line is marked green as it is written; pale words are still to come.

Facts

Name	Handwritten Journal (home-screen name: Journal)
Platform	iPad, iOS 18 or later. Requires Apple Pencil. English
Ages	Roughly 5 to 8 — children who can speak in sentences and are learning to form their letters
Price	The basic app is always free; additional features may be paid. No ads, no subscription. Category: Education
Privacy	The journal never leaves the iPad. Anonymous crash and usage data only, never sold. On-device speech; no audio recorded
Availability	App Store, autumn 2026 (date to be confirmed)
Developer	Matt Vorst, independent developer, Ohio
Press kit	handwrittenjournal.app/press — icon, screenshots, clip, boilerplate

Where it sits

	TRACING APPS	KIDS' DIARIES	THIS
Child's own speech is the content	—	—	Yes
Per-letter grading, live	Some	—	Yes
Stroke order taught mid-writing	Drills	—	Yes
Guide becomes the child's ink in place	—	—	Yes
Pages kept as a book	Reports	Yes	Yes
The child's writing never leaves the device	Varies	Varies	Yes

Nearest neighbours: Writing Wizard, iTrace, Handwriting Tracing Practice. None keeps the child's page.

Boilerplate (50 words)

Handwritten Journal turns what a child says about their day into a ruled page they write over in their own hand. Ink is marked letter by letter as they write, stroke order is taught on the spot, and every finished page joins a journal that becomes a book in their handwriting. iPad only; the journal never leaves the device.

What it is not

Not a curriculum, not a reading app, not social, not online, not cursive. It does not claim results in any number of weeks. It is a journal with a handwriting engine underneath, and it says so.

"Handwriting practice is dull. Journaling is not. If the sentence a child practises is one they wanted to say, practice stops being practice."

Press contact · the app is free to download · interviews and screen recordings available

hello@handwrittenjournal.app

handwrittenjournal.app/press

Screenshots: iPad 13-inch, 2064 × 2752

Icon: 1024 × 1024 PNG