

Handwritten Journal

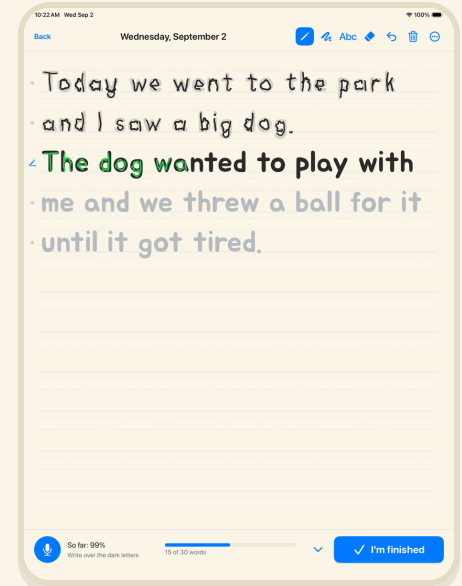

Their words, in their own hand. An iPad journal for children learning to write.

For parents and grandparents

They will write it because they said it.

Your child says what happened today. The words appear on a ruled page in big, friendly letters. They write over them with an Apple Pencil, and when a line is finished the guide underneath goes away. What is left is their own handwriting, exactly where they wrote it.

- Marked as they write. Ink inside the letter turns green and ink outside turns red — while they write, never afterwards.
- Stroke order, taught not told. A letter drawn backwards pauses the page, teaches that one letter, and lets them carry on.
- A page a day becomes a book. Every finished page joins the journal, newest first, and exports as a PDF for a grandparent.
- Their journal never leaves the iPad. No account, no ads. Speech is recognized on the iPad and no audio is kept. Anonymous crash and usage data help us improve the app, and are never sold.

Finished lines have become their handwriting. The line in hand is marked green as they write. The pale words are what they said next.

1

Talk

Tap the microphone and say what happened. Up to five minutes, and stopping part-way is completely fine. There is always Type it instead.

2

Write

The whole thing is one long page. They work down it at their own pace with an Apple Pencil, and the page marks itself letter by letter.

3

Keep

The page joins the journal with the date. Read it as their handwriting or as typed words, one tap apart. Do it for a year and you have a book.

For grown-ups

You choose the letter style and the size, and they are settings, not rewards — nothing has to be earned to make the letters bigger. Five typefaces (Andika is there because some children read it far more easily) and five sizes, each previewed at its real size before you pick it.

Progress is kept per setting, so a dip after you make the letters smaller shows you why instead of worrying you. Several children, one iPad: a profile each, with an optional PIN.

What it is not

Not a curriculum. Not a reading app. Not a game with levels to unlock. Not online.

Made for children roughly five to eight who can speak in sentences and are learning to form their letters. iPad with Apple Pencil, held like a notebook.

Handwriting practice is dull. Journaling is not. If the sentence they practice is one they wanted to say, practice stops being practice.

Ages 5 to 8

Can speak in sentences, learning to form letters

iPad only

iOS 18 or later.
Requires Apple Pencil

Journal stays on the iPad

Anonymous crash and usage data only, never sold

Five typefaces, five sizes

Chosen by a grown-up, never earned

Export as PDF

One page, one month, or the whole book

Badges, stars, streaks

A number that only goes up. Nothing to unlock

The basic app is always free · no ads · no account · we will never sell your data

Download on the App Store

handwrittenjournal.app

hello@handwrittenjournal.app

Made by an independent developer